POOR LITTLE BABY

My mother did not have anyone to help her to take care of me when she was in the field. She therefore strapped me to her back while she was working. This must have been very tiring to her, as she had to bend down all the time with her hoe. Sometimes I would be crying on her back or sleeping. But so long as I was fed and dry, my mother would continue working.

When I grew a little bigger, my mother could work properly with me on her back and so she laid me down at the foot of a banana tree. She made sure the sun was not shining directly on me, and the shadow of the tree moved away and exposed me to the sun. the sun started "roasting" me and although I cried, both my mother and my aunt though it was normal for a child to cry.

Suddenly, my mother looked at me. I was all red and half dead. She screamed and carried me. My aunt was equally frightened. They took me to the stream and washed me. But I was red. "What shall we tell the father?" they kept asking each other.
